

NOTES ON MYSTERY SPOTS

By Cal Garrison

Mystery spots are areas or points on the planet where gravity behaves differently. There is always a vortical pattern in these locations that can be dowsed with a pendulum or a single dowsing rod. All you have to do is stand over the spot and hold a pendulum or a dowsing rod in your dominant hand, relax, and wait to see which way the instrument spins or rotates.

The vortex will have a left or a right spin. Areas of left spin are destructive to living organisms. Wildlife will avoid them and plant life, trees, vegetation etc. won't thrive, or it will be twisted and strange.

Any vortex with a right spin is positive, and generating effects that support living organisms and allow them to flourish. Birds and animals will gravitate to these spots, and human beings will "just feel better" when they're in them. In some situations, depending on the receptivity and consciousness of the person, healing effects will be quite profound. That's why the myth that going to one of these spots will resurrect the dead sprang up. It won't do so in every case - only in some.

The basis for these healing effects can be best understood by looking at what's going on scientifically. Let's assume we're talking only about a positive vortex. All that's going on here is a distortion in the gravity wave. Energy, or the push of gravity (gravity is not a pull, it's a push) coming into the planet at that point is behaving in an anomalous fashion relative to the way it behaves elsewhere on the globe. This has an impact of the atomic structure of anything in that spot.

The cells in the body of a person with cancer, let's say, are out of alignment due to the illness. Within the confines of the vortex what the distortion in the gravity wave does is affect the molecular bonds in the cells of the sick person. In effect what happens is those bonds are loosened, the way the grain boundaries in the metal of a spoon are loosened by a spoon bender – and what may happen is that the cancer cells that are out of alignment could go into alignment – enough so that the individual could emerge from the vortex cancer free. The same thing would happen with any illness, always, of course, depending on the receptivity of the person and their level of consciousness.

The same anomalous effect in the gravity wave could bring a dead person back to life – hence, the myth. I am sure this has happened or the myth wouldn't be alive, but I wouldn't count on it happening as a matter of course. When a person dies it is time for them to pass over and continue their lessons on another level. If you cart a corpse into a positive vortex and it comes to life then I would say, it wasn't their time to go. If they remain deceased, it's God's Will.

It is a good idea when you're moving around in a positive vortex to pray, meditate, or go into your heart and see what comes up. Often information gets transferred from higher sources. Many people describe hearing direct messages from within about the direction their life is supposed to take. Here again, what comes through is entirely dependent on the receptivity and the consciousness of the individual.

I am pretty sure these spots can be mapped and that they correspond to intersections in the Earth Grid. The Earth Grid is an icosadodecahedral grid that wraps around the planet like a net. It is known about both by the scientists and the metaphysicians who understand it relative to their particular perspective. Everything in creation is based on geometry and the Earth Grid is the framework, it is the energetic structure, the etheric pattern that supports the world of form here in the Third Dimension.

If you were to take a map of the Earth Grid and lay it over a map of the world you would find vortexes at every point of intersection. And there would be smaller vortexes on the smaller harmonics of those intersections. At any of those points gravity will behave differently and create either positive or negative effects. The direction of spin in any vortex can be controlled with the mind, the same way water can be affected by thought (Have you read "Messages From Water"?). I have never had the opportunity to experiment with this but I know people who have.

Without knowing for sure how these things work I will stick my neck out and postulate that there has to be a balance of both positive and negative vortexes on the planet. Logic tells me this, but I may be wrong. We live in a world where evolution and involution are natural processes – both positive and negative energy are essential to life – we need growth and decay. There has to be a balance of both for things to work here. That may change as we move more into the Photon Band and Unity Consciousness. The whole planet is moving out of polarity into Unity so maybe all these negative vortexes will reverse their spin and there will be nothing but positive energy coming into the planet. That is speculation on my part.

I heard somewhere that the dark forces (Secret Government, Illuminati, The Grays, and the Reptiles) have sought to maintain control of the planet by controlling the direction of spin in some of the major vortexes. They are partial to negative spin. It gives them more power and control to have more negative energy coming in. One of the reasons Tibet is such hot property, and why it has been closed off, is because the dark forces have needed to maintain what has always been one of the most powerful, positive vortexes in a state of negative spin. It keeps them one up on the good guys.

(Don't quote me on this. I heard it spoken of in a workshop somewhere but I can't recall who said it – or if it came from a book. The concept feels real to me and is intriguing. It could give your imagination something to work with)

Check out;

Adventures Unlimited Publishing – they print a lot of books on this stuff – “Anti-Gravity and the World Grid” is a good one. It's edited by David Hatcher Childress.

Bruce Cathie's books are good too. Start with “The Energy Grid” and go from there.

Wilhelm Reich's books and anything on Tesla might help you too.
